A Monument
to
Charles Stewart Parnell

History permeates every inch of the Irish landscape. One of the biggest names in this city was Parnell. A monument now honors him in Dublin's city center.

“The Uncrowned King of Ireland”

A “former friend” and “bitter foe” of Charles Stewart Parnell, Michael Davitt “wrote of him, ‘To deny his greatness would be like denying the existence of a mountain’” (Abel 7). A formidable and “charismatic” leader, Parnell entered the parliament at age 29 “as a member of the Home Rule League, pressing for Irish autonomy,” according to his “Historic Figures” biography at bbc.co.uk/history.

After “two British diplomats” were murdered in Dublin’s Phoenix Park, a forged letter asserted Parnell’s support for these violent acts, but “proof that the letter was a forgery transformed Parnell into a hero in the eyes of English liberals. It was the peak of his career” (bbc.co.uk, para. 4).

Certainly, Parnell provides a study in contrasts. As a landowner, Parnell did not stand to benefit personally from agrarian reforms he proposed. His mother, an American, was “violently—if not pathologically—anti-English,” (Abels 11), and Parnell became the voice of the Irish national movement. However, there is an old Gaelic saying that “even wise men have flaws.” Charles Stewart Parnell’s politically-fatal flaw involved a scandalous association with a married Englishwoman named Kitty O’Shea in whose divorce he was named.

Who designed the Parnell monument?

“The monument was executed in New York by Dublin-born sculptor Augustus Saint-Gaudens” (Healy 7) and now “stands on the central island where Parnell Street crosses the top of O’Connell Street” (Healy 6). John Redmond, Parnell’s successor “as leader of the Irish Parliamentary Party” was responsible for instigating the Parnell monument, “partly as a symbolic gesture to honour the ‘uncrowned king of Ireland’ and to consolidate his aspiration to reunite the constitutionalists under his own leadership” (www.dublincity.ie/Images).

Also according to www.dublincity.ie/Images, Parnell attended the “unveiling ceremony for the O’Connell Monument accompanying the archbishop in his ceremonial carriage” (17).

The inscription listed below appears on the monument, which includes a bronze figure of Parnell on a pillar of Ashlar granite. On the day of the unveiling, “Dublin Corporation changed the name of Great Britain Street to Parnell Street” (Healy 7).

“...no man has the right to say to his country, ‘thus far shalt thou go and no further’ and we have never attempted to fix the ne-plus-ultra to the progress of Ireland’s nationhood, and we never shall. Go soirbhídh Dia Éire dá clainn. [That God may make Ireland flourish for her people.]”

—Charles Stewart Parnell
